Not illustrated. 1873 edition. Excerpt: .He took him by the arm and led him away. Little by little he drew from him so much of the story of his sorrows as Lazarus could tell without betraying his real relationship to Mary--a secret which he would jealously guard with his latest breath. The confidence thus forced from him, and kindly received by the other, seemed to have brought some relief to his mind. When at last they parted at the corner of the street, the stranger gave him a card, bearing his name and address, and, moreover, promised to make immediate inquiries. If it proved as Lazarus had said, he would endeavour to procure him fresh employment. And at least, so far as the inquiry was concerned, the stranger seemed resolved to keep his word. While Abraham retraced his steps to his home, with a still and grateful heart, for...
