Excerpt: . . . part of the ship - that being deeper in the water forward, she might steer the better. We had very stormy weather, which is rare in these latitudes. Saw the same tunnies. Fine weather, but sometimes squally, prevailed on the 29. We saw some frigate-birds, and a white bird, with wings marked with grey. At sun-set, we saw a ship to windward, steering the same course as we. We enjoyed a fine fresh wind and beautiful the 30. The air cooler. We saw the ship we had seen last night, a little to windward. She had crowded sail; we did the like; she hoisted English colours, we ours. We caught tunnies, and saw flying-fish. THE SEA AND FISHES. A MORE dismal sight than the main sea is scarcely to be seen. A man becomes presently impatient of being in the centre of a circle, the circumference of which he never attains. It however presents some very interesting scenes. I do not speak of it when tempestuous only. During a calm, and especially at night in hot climates, it is surprizing to see the sparkling of it. I have taken in a glass some of those luminous points of which it is full; and have seen them move about with great vivacity. They are said to be the fry of fish; and are sometimes seen in a heap together, appearing like moons. At night, when the ship is under way, and is surrounded by...
