Outskirts Press, United States, 2010. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 224 x 152 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Improve your future employability options in a troubled economy If you are struggling to find a job, concerned about keeping the one you have or feel that your career has stalled in a dead end job this book was written for you. After 25 years of effort by 18 esteemed professional organizations America s well documented global skill gap has worsened. Faced with the loss of baby-boomer expertise and educational levels current employees will have to navigate multiple jobs and career changes that will require new skills. Leibold thoroughly researches the efforts to close the skill gap and other scientific sources of future required skill-sets and then convincingly presents 6 scientifically derived and validated universal Life-long Transferable Competencies (LTCs) and their interrelated performance process required for a successful job and career(s). He then presents over 60 practical suggestions on how /You can develop the LTCs, improve your career transitions and influence; thereby improving your future employability options. This unique book for the /first time takes research from closing America s Global Skill Gap and uses it to demonstrate how 6 new competencies, and the process the reader can use to develop them, will enhance their future employability for any occupation and most levels of responsibility. Its importance to all employees is illustrated by the four book endorsements from the business, education and professional organizational leaders below. The Conference Boards research confirms that American business finds new entrants to the workforce lacking in the skills required to be globally competitive both today and for the demands of the coming years. Frank Leibold, in his new book Competencies That Close America s Global Skill Gap, recognizes and analyzes this...
