Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Juvenile Instructor, Vol. 41: Organ of the Deseret Sunday School Union One day we went out of the city by the gate which opens into the country. There is a tower over this gate and a tablet with lettering which we could not make out, and a clock that affords an indifferent time. I might say New York time, for Cartagena is almost due south of New York City. Outside the gate, in the open field where the Spanish shot the patriot officers in 1815, there are sixteen busts erected on pedestals, in honor of those who died there. Beyond the field of the patriots is the suburb of Jimani, which is also protected on the land side by a wall. Then we cross an arm of the bay and leaving the city cemetery on our right, we turn to the left and climb the winding incline that leads up to the summit of Castle San Filipi. The hill is more than one hundred feet high, and the sloping walls of brick and stone have the appearance of being part of the hill itself. Hitherto we have viewed the old forts at a distance, now we stand on the battle ments, peep into the round guard towers, and enter the long passages that connected this fort with the city, more than a mile and a half away, and with the harbor forts over beyond the cemetery. Five old cannon only remain to tell the tale of the scenes that were once enacted there. Little is known of the history of those old wars. Cartagena was first taken by Baal, a French admiral, in 1544. Sir...
