States that the Hungarian economy has responded to the challenges of technical progress for only short periods over the past 40 years. Shows that during the last 5 years, channels of technology transfer have been nearly blocked, and that research and development has dropped to 10 years behind international standards. Proposes higher quality standards and pay for technical personnel, and the import of new technologies. 9. 125 Watanabe, Susumu. Employment and Income Implications of the Bio-Revolution: A Speculative Note. International Labour Review, May-June 1985, pp. 281-297. Asserts that genetic engineering and advanced propagation techniques have immense potential for the production of new pharmaceuticals and new plant and seed varieties. Explores employment and income effects of these developments in different countries, finding that poor countries, especially in Africa, are the greatest potential beneficiaries. 9. 126 Weiss, Charles and Jequier, Nicholas, eds.
